

Why should I make a will

If you have not made a will then rules of intestacy decide who gets what. Why take the risk? Here are four good reasons why you should make a will.

1. If you are an unmarried couple without a will your partner will get nothing.
2. If you are married without children your parents/siblings will get nothing.
3. If you have children who would look after them and manage their affairs?
4. If you do not have a good relationship with a family member or relative you should make a will to ensure they do not get anything.
- 5 You should be in control and protect your family and loved ones after death.

But I already have a will....

If you have made a will it may need updating if, for example, you are getting married, divorced, splitting up from your partner, bought a property, have had children or a loved one has died.

It costs too much

Making a simple will is not expensive. Here at Marchants we offer fixed fees so that you know how much to pay. It could be far more expensive if you do not make one.

I can do a DIY will from a shop or off the internet

Yes you can, but there are risks involved if either things go wrong or the will is ineffective. You have no redress in such circumstances. Your family and loved ones will not thank you in these circumstances. Better to get it done properly.
